When you think about getting your school work done one time, meeting paper and assignment deadline, accomplishing your career goals, and avoiding distractions, are you haunted by questions like these: Why am I always procrastinating? How can I do all of this without burning out? Why is it so hard to make progress on the things I genuinely want to do? What if I'm just lazy? You are not alone. A lot of people struggle with time management and goal setting. Sometimes it feels like an uphill battle to stay focused and make progress. The Aligned Time Journal helps you to meet your deadlines, eliminate distractions, and get your work done through a simple, repeatable process: Setting three goals each semester based on what YOU want for your education. Going beyond the typical "Get a good grade" or "Finish all my requirements," these goals will make sure that the investment you are making in your education result in a career and a life you love. Setting three realistic, weekly tasks that will align your time to your semester goals. The weekly check-in also supports you in saying no, creating balance, and developing a deep sense of gratitude for your life, just as it is. Choosing three daily to-dos that will get you closer to your goal, today. This daily practice keeps you moving forward without ever feeling overwhelmed, ashamed, or behind. The Aligned Time Journal is anchored in research-based time management strategies such as gratitude, prioritization, self-compassion, delegation, energy management, and mental contrasting (among others). The Aligned Time Journal helps you set goals and make progress while seamlessly integrating with every to-do list and calendar.
